More Than a Letter Home: Activities to Send to Families BEFORE the Year Begins

No time to waste! Prepare you parents and students for their first day of Kindergarten! Any one of these family activity ideas will welcome children and families into your program and set the stage for family involvement. Teachers can also adapt these activities to keep families engaged throughout the year.

Mail song lyrics to each family to have them sing with their child before school starts. Songs with simple words set to familiar tunes will work best. When children arrive at school, they will already be familiar with the words and tune and feel a connection between home and school.

Put a few bean seeds in an envelope to mail to families, and invite them to plant the seeds at home. Let them know you are planting the same kind of seeds at school. When children and families arrive on the first day of school they can compare how much the seeds have grown at home and at school.

Ask families to work together to create a family poster. Explain that they can make the poster by attaching four pieces of construction paper together to make one large sheet and can then fill their poster with photos, drawings, notes, and handprints.

Send home a note that briefly describes one of your favorite children's books, and tell families that you will read this book on the first day of school. Knowing a little bit about what will happen on the first day will help children feel more comfortable.

*Tell me and I forget.
Teach me and I remember.
Involve me and I learn.*

- Benjamin Franklin

Ask families to talk with their children about their interests and to send you a note or an e-mail telling you about their discussion. Is their child interested in construction machines? Art? Animals? Explain that over the course of the year you will be offering classroom books and props based on children's interests and this information will help you get started.

CAREGIVING

in Uncertain Times:
Early Childhood Educators Offer Seven Tips

1. Let your child play.

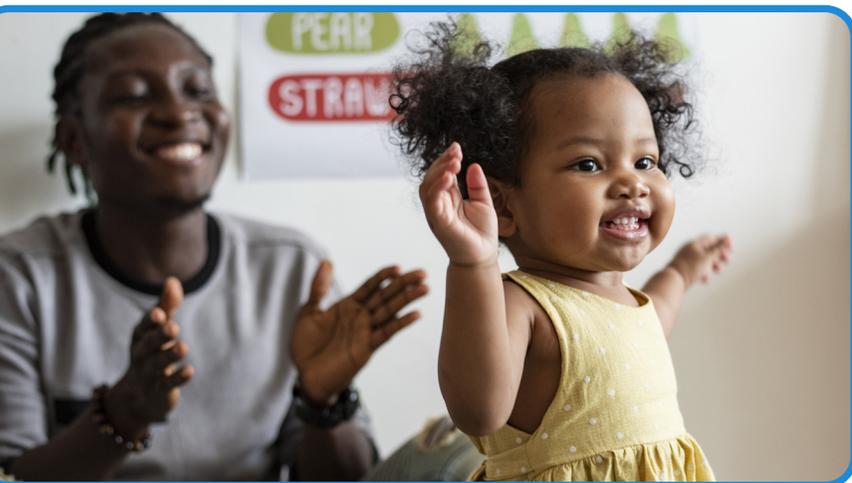

Learning happens through all multisensory experiences—not just in a virtual or in-person classroom. Give your child opportunities to wonder, create, explore, and notice things in their home environments and communities. Allow them to lose themselves in the appropriate, uninterrupted, and meaningful learning that occurs with block play, sensory play, and creative play with unrelated materials.

2. Be confident in your parenting.

There is no one right answer during a pandemic or other challenging time. Each day is different, as are each day's choices. Be confident that the parenting choices you make are the best for you and your family. That way, you can look back when this is over and say, "I did the best I could with the information I had at that time."

3. Trust your child's resilience.

Children are open to all possibilities—including wearing masks and maintaining social distancing—if it means they can play with friends. They take seriously their role in keeping others safe, and they understand when schools need to be closed or other precautions need to be taken.

7. Partner with teachers.

Teachers are your allies. They love your children. Together, you can partner to cultivate a positive learning experience despite the wider context in which we are living. Young children are resilient. Regardless of the circumstance—be it a pandemic or other upheaval—your child can still thrive.

4. Be flexible.

With virtual-learning platforms, families often worry when their children aren't fully engaged or don't want to participate. It's okay. There are other options to engage and learn, such as sensory play, outdoor exploration, and one-on-one story time.

5. Create a learning space at home.

Organize and label your child's materials. Set a realistic schedule for them. Read books to them each day. These practices will maximize your child's exposure to what is developmentally appropriate for them. It also will minimize the shock of past changes and allow you to better support your child through future change.

6. Celebrate rituals.

How does your child get ready for school in the morning? How do they go to bed at night? What steps do you and your child routinely follow? These kinds of rituals help children know what to expect. They also give parents confidence and help ease our anxiety as we continue to face uncertainty and "new normals."
